CREEPING BELLFLOWER

Campanula rapunculoides

Don't let the heart-shaped basal leaves and pretty blue flowers fool you—this is one tough weed and it will out-compete anything in your flowerbed. No wonder it ranks in the top 10 invasive weeds by the Canadian Council on Invasive Species.

The problem is this plant has two very powerful means of reproduction. First, it has a thick, fleshy roots called rhizomes which spread and mat and crowd out other plants. Secondly, this plant produces thousands of seed which remain viable in the soil for many years.

Here's how to cope:

- Pick the flowers so they don't seed.
- Seeds need light to germinate. A thick layer of mulch will prevent germination.
- Loosen the soil and remove as many roots as you can. (Never rototill as every tiny bit of root will result in a new plant.) Be persistent—you may have to remove roots for several growing seasons. Apply a thick layer of mulch on top of the soil.
- Occasionally these tough roots will send up leaves even through the mulch. Stay on top of that and remove the leaves as soon as possible. No leaves means no photosynthesis and that will help to weaken the remaining roots in the soil.
- Herbicides like glyphosate may slow down the spread but won't get rid of it completely.

Our Summer Students have wrapped up the summer and are headed back to school. A special thank you to Boyd Schiller and Adam Jetzke for all their hard work. Projects that they were involved with are: gutter & street sweeping, assist with sewer flushing, garbage collection, mowing the lawn and watering all the flowers that keep St. Walburg beautiful all summer long. We wish them all the best in their future studies as they head off to post secondary education.
